New riven Yorkstone paving flags are manufactured now as they have been traditionally for hundreds of years. Skilled masons quarry the stone, which is then riven apart into slabs to expose its natural texture which is referred to as 'riven'. This slab is then finished using a hammer and chisel. This produces a finished product which has been created from stone heralded as one of the finest in the world, particularly for paving.

Riven Yorkstone has a distinct characteristic due to its riven face and is available in varying colours and sizes which makes it very versatile in its use. Not only is it an attractive product, but also extremely durable and strong.

Using stone from two of the finest quarries in Yorkshire we can provide you with a choice of Priori (consistent pale yellow buff) or Grange (varied range of buff, brown and silver blue). Both products are handcrafted to a very high standard and would be a visually pleasing and practical asset to any application.
